

POV, Grouping, Point Sentence

Body Paragraph

H.C.

cloth is quickly catching the amount of hand woven yarn, which shows how the use of machines is increasing. The Indian economist (Doc 6) in 1946 talks of how handwoven cloth makers cannot compete with the machine-made cloth makers, and is thus rapidly declining. This shows India's step towards a more mechanized cloth industry. As an economist, the author of this document may be over-stating the rise of mechanization because he would know that machines can make more

Example
POV, Historical Context

POV

production was influenced by the Green Revolution ^(Doc 10). The Green Revolution provided many new technologies to regions that ~~was~~ they were unavailable to previously (doc 5, 8, 10). The ~~peasants~~ ^{peasants}

Example
Grouping
Point sentence

Documents

account is wildly descriptive and detailed as someone who lived in China during the time of the peasant revolts. ~~But~~, as an American he was not part of the peasant class and thus would not have been part of the revolts. It would be helpful to have a letter from a peasant involved in the uprisings to verify Hinton's claims that social equality was really starting to play out as landowners were questioned by their former employees. Still, the Communist Party

Example
POV

now "this increasingly explosive force transferred from the landowners to the peasants." (doc 6) After the communist party advocated anti-Japanese sentiment, the peasants subsequently found the confidence to challenge land owners, with the knowledge that the Japanese had been successfully defeated ~~with~~ in part to the power they, the peasants held, and in part to the communist motivation. This led to the breaking down of Chinese landowning infrastructure as peasants revolted. Hinton's account is wildly descriptive and detailed as someone who lived in

Example Historical Context

H.C.

example analysis →